PostA wonderful book with instructions on making a press, designing a picture, and applying pressed flowers to candles, glass, porcelain and paper. The book is full of color photos, some sketches, and contains chapters on Working with Pressed Flowers, Simple Projects, Using Thermaseal, Ideas for Christmas, Projects for Special Occasions, Working with Resin, and The Pressed Flower Garden. Includes a long list of plants that press well, with Latin and common names, a brief description of the plant or flower and pressing tips.

The author shows how to make a wide range of objects, using pressed flowers, including greetings cards, bookmarks, jewellery, scented sachets and many unusual gifts. As well as explaining in detail how to make such items, the author describes the plants - garden varieties, trees, shrubs and indoor foliage plants - that can be grown to provide never-ending source materials and inspiration.

From Library Journal These books are notable for the beauty and creativity of the projects—a prime consideration when selecting dried-flower books. Le Bailey has many small projects for cards, bookmarks, and framed items such as pendants and paperweights. An annotated list of plants used in the projects is included. Carver's book has projects using the unusual technique of gluing natural materials to fabric in designs reminiscent of fine embroidery. Although the work is painstaking in its detail, the effect is stunning. Both books are full of inspirational ideas for the experienced dried-flower crafter.
